Henry works intuitively to create sculptures that express the inspiration of nature and the spirit. Drawing inspiration from a deep spiritual foundation, Henry's creations combine geometric and organic forms to create abstract compositions. He often uses found materials sourced in an industrial setting, giving scraps new life. His techniques, informed by years of professional experience in metal work, include plasma cutting, welding, and a variety of manual and machine treatments. He often paints the surface of the sculpture with a torch to add texture and color. His many metal-work sculptures, large and small, have made the Christine Center an informal sculpture park!
